European Perspective on the Challenges of AI in the Practice of Law

Péter Homoki

I. Introduction

Currently, the United States is a clear world leader in many important fields related to artificial intelligence (AI).<sup>1</sup> Considering that the use of language (natural language processing) is a major focus of academic research in AI and language-related models dominate the news among the machine learning systems,<sup>2</sup> it is understandable that U.S. lawyers believe that the challenges brought by AI will affect their profession quite directly. It may provide an interesting, broader perspective to consider how lawyers think about AI in Europe.

Since 2016 the Council of Bars and Law Societies of Europe (CCBE)<sup>3</sup> has published several studies on the consequences of using AI and adopted the CCBE Considerations on the Legal Aspects of Artificial Intelligence in 2020,<sup>4</sup> analyzing

It became the representative organization of the European national bars and law societies. Through its members, it represents the European profession in its common interests before European and international institutions.

Re: Layoff, Effective February 24, 2020

Dear Mr. Gagne,

This letter confirms our discussion on February 20, 2020 wherein you were advised laying you off due to your inability to perform your duties as a line mechanic. It is hoped that this will allow you to return to work at a later date.

In the interim, and under separate cover you will receive the following:

- Your final pay cheque to today's date;
- All outstanding vacation pay that may be owing to you; and
- Your record of Employment for the purposes of obtaining Employment Insurance.

Please be advised that we have continued your employee coverage under our benefit plan until January 31, 2021. Thereafter your coverage in this plan will cease. It is recommended that you contact your broker for more information regarding your coverage.

While you are laid off, we encourage you to stay in communication with our company. If you have any questions or concerns, please direct any communications to Tonya Leveille, Human Resources Manager, at 705-474-7469.

In the event that we cannot call you back to work before January 31, 2021, you will be considered laid off from Boart Longyear and will receive any amounts owing to you under the Ontario Employment Insurance Act.

Finally, and in an effort to assist you in obtaining alternate employment within Boart Longyear, or at another place of business we would be pleased to field calls from prospective employers regarding your services to our company. Please have those calls directed to the Human Resource Manager noted above.

Boart Longyear regrets having to take these measures and if a supervisory position becomes available where

Market trends

- Strong market demand: Large vendors focusing on BigLaw and US market, investing a lot in product development
- Shift in revenue: Decreasing revenues from legal databases, but offset by growth in new class of tools.
- Innovation and competition: strong innovation-led competition exists for premium products, could eventually trickle down to smaller firms and mass markets in the US/UK (even if not via the same vendors)

Challenges in adoption for smaller markets

-  Jurisdiction-specific limitations: Legal databases and legaltech innovations are specific to languages and jurisdictions
-  Barriers to scalability: Cross-jurisdictional challenges limit the adoption of tools across countries
-  Need for local incentives: small legal markets require their own incentives and solutions for growth

Barriers

- Significant differences between common law and civil law systems and within civil law systems (e.g., Germany and France) => no transfer-learning for cross-jurisdictional AI solutions
- Costly legal data collection: Gathering case law and national laws across the EU is expensive, varying degrees of governmental transparency
- Integration with court systems: Differing electronic court interfaces create barriers to tool adoption, requiring constant updates
- Scalability issues: Lack of a unified market in the EU hinders profitability and scaling of AI or legaltech solutions

Financing and long-term concerns

Market size to finance?

Government role and lawyers' independence: Potential for government subsidies, but don't expect much (user-friendly solutions, equality of arms and prosecution will have better tools)

Stratification of the market: Growing disparity between those who can afford and those who cannot

Outside criminal law: changes in languages used and choice of law
